

To vote in a federal by-election, you must:

- be a Canadian citizen, 18 years old, live in the riding since March 1st,
- prove your identity and address, one of three ways:
 - 1) Show one identification issued by a Canadian government, that contains photo, name and address.
 - 2) Show two pieces of authorized identification, (one must have address).
 - 3) If you have two pieces of identification but can't prove where you live, you may have your residence attested to by another elector.

Elections Canada will mail a voter information card to everyone on the list of electors. Read the card to make sure that your name and address are correct.

- If your name and address are correct, keep the card. It shows that you are registered to vote, and tells you when and where to vote.
- If your name and address on the card are not correct, you will need to call Elections Canada's local office, 1-866-275-1778.

If you do not receive a voter information card, it may mean that you are not registered on the list of electors. You can also register at the polling station during advance polls or on election day, but to save time, register ahead of election day.
